Tornados food for sale

Everyone likes to snack on stadium food when watching their favorite team. (And hold your breath, hoping that their team will turn out to be the winner!) Tickets to the game can cost quite a penny, whether you want NFL games, MLB games, or even college football matchups. But your wallet can also hit for incredibly expensive stadium food. The prices of favorite snacks vary depending on the stadium and the city. However, some foods and snacks are usually too more expensive than others. Sports Management Degrees reports that concession companies selling you their popcorn or hot dogs pay the stadium a fixed rate - often in excess of $100,000. Their other expenses include the price of their product, the wages they pay to their employees, and team taking (which is usually between 40% and 50%). In addition, most foods in the stadium are sold to the customer for a high mark-up , which explains why one hot dog can cost you as much as $5 or $6. Below check out some expensive foods that you will have to overpay for the next time you go to the game.

16. Beer Classic beer and game combination is too expensive. | iStock.com/BristolDen Average mark-up: 26% They can't technically be counted as food, but drinks , especially beer, are as important as snacks on the concession bench. A glass of beer will cost you a lot in many stadiums - for example, from $5 to $10.75 in NFL stadiums. And there is no doubt: Beer is a very profitable item for concession sellers (and teams that receive a reduction in their sales). According to the team's marketing report, beer costs between $3 and $7.75 in MLB stadiums. In NBA arenas beer will cost you from $5 to $10.50. And in nhl arenas beer will cost you from $5.25 to $10.50. Profit margins will vary depending on what discounts sellers charge and what beer they serve. Nevertheless, AZ Central reports that industry guidelines for concession companies show a 26% beer mark-up. 15. Soft drinks soda is one of the most expensive items out there. | Nitrub/Getty Images Medium marking: 94% If you don't drink beer in the game, you probably drink soda. According to the team's marketing report, a refreshing drink in MLB stadiums will cost between $1 and $5. You can expect to pay $3 to $6.25 in NBA arenas. You'll need to shell out $3 to $8 at NFL Stadium. And in the NHL arena, you need to pay $3 to $6. The profit margins of the concession vendor depend on a number of factors. (Perhaps even including the perennial question of whether they issue Coca-Cola or Pepsi branded beverages!) Nevertheless, AZ Central reports that industry guidelines offer a 94% mark-up for cold drinks, such as soft drinks, which probably leaves room for a relatively nice profit. 14. Hot chocolate You could probably buy 10 packs for $3 in a grocery store. | iStock.com average: 148% If it's cold outside, many fans try to warm up with a cup of hot However, it is likely that that styrofoam cup of thin hot chocolate (which was probably mixed from powder as the kind you can buy in the store). AZ Central reports that industry guidelines state that a concession of 148% refers to hot drinks such as hot chocolate. The profit that suppliers from these mark-ups sees vary. But we'll tell you the following: If the concession bench staff don't irritate your hot chocolate with real chocolate and freshly whipped cream, you'll probably overpay. 13. Nachos you pay a lot for that cheese. | iStock.com profit margin: from 47% to 64% Everyone likes nachos, including sports fans. However, Sports Management Degrees reports that concession vendors have a profit margin of between 47% and 64% on the sale of nachos. It's a pretty big marker for what is usually just a tray of tortilla crisps with some cheese sauce, and perhaps a few jalapeño pepper slices, drizzled over the top. Nevertheless, eating nachos in a game - especially a baseball game - is a time-honored tradition. We don't expect it to stop anytime soon - even if, by FDA standards, cheese sauce isn't technically real cheese. 12. Pretzels Classic Snack makes their sellers a nice profit. | iStock.com average profit margin: 54 to 69% People like to eat soft pretzels in the supermarket, boardwalks, cinemas and, of course, sports stadiums. KaTom reports that concession suppliers have a profit margin of 54% to 69% on soft pretzel sales. But it's not just your standard, salted pretzel that you'll most likely encounter the next time you go to the stadium concession stand. As The Daily Meal points out, vendors in many stadiums and arenas pose a new turn of the classic snack. Whether you want a burger on a pretzel bun, a hot dog on a pretzel roll, or just a super-sized, 2-pound pretzel, there's definitely something for everyone. 11. Caramel apples Sticky treatment has large overcuffs. | Sgreer721/Getty Images Average profit margin: from 60% to 76% Caramel apples tasty - if embarrassing - treat. So we are always happy to see them on the menu in the stadium or arena discount stands. Although fans love the taste of this dessert, concession vendors most likely adore them due to high mark-ups. Wise Bread reports that concession vendors in caramel apple sales have a profit margin of between 60% and 76%. (For the record, candy apples come with an even higher profit margin of 80% to 88%.) Still, knowing how much of our hard-earned money is going straight into the concession seller's pocket probably won't stop us from enjoying caramel apples when the mood strikes. 10. Belgian waffles ohio are the main fan of these unusual arena snacks. | iStock.com average profit margin: from 62% to 77% Belgian waffles - a type of waffle with deeper pockets and a crunchy texture than a standard American waffle - are not the most common food in the stadium. But when sellers put them in the menu, all profits (except of course). Wise Bread reports that concession vendors have 62% of the profit margin on sales of Belgian waffles. Despite the high marking, Ohio teams and fans seem particularly seduced by their Belgian waffles. The brand Taste of Belgium is the official Cincinnati Reds waffle. Cleveland Browns fans can try a grilled breakfast at Bratwurst on the Belgian waffle team at FirstEnergy Stadium. 9. Hot dogs Hot dogs make up a huge part of the sale of stadium food. | iStock.com profit margin: from 62% to 81% fans eat a large number of hot dogs in sports stadiums across the country. But as the National Hot Dogs and Sausage Council (yes, it exists!) will tell you: Hot dogs and sausages are perennial concession mvp standing at Major League ballparks across the country. Similarly, The New York Times reports that hot dogs, pizzas and popcorn still account for about two-thirds of food sales in sports stadiums - even as baseball fans warm up to more new and creative concession options. Sports Management Degrees reports that concession suppliers have a profit margin of between 62% and 81% on the sale of hot dogs. But it's not just standard hot dogs that make sellers (and teams) tons of dough every season. Delish reports that you can find many insane hot dogs and sausages in MLB stadiums across the US. One particularly unique entry? Pittsburgh Pirates Cracker Jack and Mac Dog, which is topped with macaroni and cheese, salted caramel sauce, fried pickled jalapeños, and caramel-plated popcorn. 8. Pizza They make great profits to have a warmed pizza. | iStock.com profit margin: from 69% to 75% It's no secret that Americans love their pizza. So it should come as no surprise that pizza is one of the most popular - and profitable - stadium foods. Sports Management Degrees reports that concession vendors have a profit margin of between 69% and 75% on pizza sales. (Pretty impressive when you consider most of that pizza is probably not very fresh, and in fact, it is usually just warmed up.) Most of us are not picky about our pizza (as long as it doesn't come up with any toppings we hate). But gourmet pizza fans will get excited to learn that at Philadelphia's Lincoln Financial Field you can enjoy pizza, which week times as one of the best football stadium foods in America. In fact, the stadium boasts the posts of Marc Vetri's popular Pizzeria Vetri. Each bakes their own pastries to order, spot brick ovens and serves delicious margherita pizza, sausage pizza, and rotolos. Vetri's signature made of rolled pizza dough with ricotta, soppressata, and marinara. 7. Funnel Cakes This sweet treatment is available at a price. | iStock.com average profit margin: from 75% to 85% Funnel cakes are not just for carnivals and fairs! You can also enjoy this sweet snack, which consists of deep fried dough served with sugar powder or other toppings, in many stadiums and arenas when using the game. Wise Bread reports that concession vendors have 75% to 85% profit margin funnel cakes for sale. This makes this snack a snack from the menu of the most expensive foods you will see. A simple, sugar-topped funnel cake can be exactly what most fans want. But if you go see the Arizona Diamondbacks in their home stadium, you can always try a new chicken and funnel pie sandwich. USA Today reports that the dish includes garlic black pepper cheddar, strawberry jam and maple syrup - and makes up the craziest food list in MLB parks. 6. Popcorn Larger bags get higher profits. | iStock.com/Bhofack2 average profit margin: from 82% to 92% Popcorn is a popular treat for cinemas, boardwalks, and sports stadiums. It seems that many of us always want to overpay for this delicious food. Sports Management Degrees reports that concession vendors have a profit margin of between 82% and 87% in small popcorn cardboard boxes. It is unbelievable that the profit margin jumps to 88% to 92% in larger popcorn boxes. More food for reflection? According to scientists, people with large buckets of popcorn ate about twice as much as those who had average buckets - even when scientists filled some of their two-week nuclei. 5. Corn Dogs Who knows what excuse vendors for this marking. | iStock.com profit margin: from 82% to 89% Starting to run into the five most expensive foods in the sports stadium is a modest corn dog. While corn dog is not usually the most expensive menu item, Wise Bread reports that concession vendors have between 82% and 89% profit margin on corn dog sales. (This may tell you something about the quality of meat!) Over the years, countless creative twists of the classic corn dog have made headlines on sports news sites. One of the most striking was the dubious named D-Bat Dog. SB Nation reported that diamondbacks concession people think this 18-inch corn dog looks like a baseball bat. But we have to say it looks like a baseball bat doesn't exactly sound like a selling point as much as food. 4. Ice cream cones On a hot day there is nothing like ice cream. | Pixabay Average profit margin: 84% to 90% No one can say no ice cream cone on a hot day. This most likely explains why this sweet treatment is almost everywhere on the match menu in stadiums and arenas across the country. It is also useful for sellers; Wise Bread reports that concession stands have a profit margin of 84% to 90% on the sale of ice cream cones. As you might expect, the sky is the limit of the number of creative variations that fans have seen when ordering this treatment. And, of course, Eater notes that ice cream doesn't always have to come to the cone. Especially in MLB stadiums, fans have been ordering ice cream served in mini plastic helmets since the 1970s. Cotton candy Pink cotton candy is a classic treatment. | Winter_Studios/Getty Images Average profit margin: from 85% to 94% Cotton Candy makes it into the three best most expensive foods in sports stadiums. Wise Bread announces that concessions has a profit margin of 85% to 94% for the sale of cotton sweets. Sales, enough, some stadiums not only let their vendors sell cotton candy, but also pump the scent through their HVAC systems. As reported by ESPN, the Edward Jones Dome, the St. Louis Rams' home stadium smells its air in warm, gently twisted sugar notes with raspberry hints. In the first year, concession sales increased - not only for cotton sweets, but also for other menu items. 2. Shaved ice Shaved ice is one of the cheapest items. | Ruengdet/Getty Images Average profit margin: from 88% to 93% shaved ice is exactly how it sounds: a treatment made by shaving ice from the block (and a fragrance with brightly colored syrup). Wise Bread reports that concession vendors have a profit margin of between 88% and 93% for the sale of shaved ice. Since ice costs little to produce and vendors can buy flavored syrups cheaply in bulk, these treats are one of the most profitable items in concession stands. Shaved ice doesn't quite sound like a dessert that lends itself to a creative interpretation. But vendors have found a way to introduce fans to something new. Infatuation reports that at Dodger Stadium in Los Angeles, one of the best treats sample Raspado mexican shaved ice. As the Los Angeles Times notes, Raspados are usually mixed ice drinks made from a variety of fruits, often (and at best) seasoned with a rich piquante and spicy seasoned suede hit. Sounds like a substantial improvement in standard shaved ice! 1. Snow cones You pay a lot for frozen, flavored water. | Arinahabich/Getty Images Average profit margin: from 92% to 97% It's not just shaved ice that takes concession vendors' profits. Snow cones, a closely related dessert that uses crushed rather than shaved ice, are my number one spot as the most expensive food in sports stadiums. Sports Management Degrees reports that concession vendors have a profit margin of between 92% and 97% on sales of snow cones. But ordering a snow cone doesn't always mean settling down for a simple combination of ice and syrup - at least not if you can get to the guaranteed course field, the home of the Chicago White Sox. Here you can order an adult snow cone, which Eater reports is your choice of syrup and vodka. Sounds like a winner to us! Read more: 10 iconic foods that America is most famous for
